Manure Management Web Resource Available for Livestock Producers

The Livestock and Poultry Environmental Learning Center has launched an informative website on manure management. The site, launched in March 2008, hopes to be a premier stop for science-based information on animal manure issues. More than 150 representatives of land grant institutions, U.S. Department of Agriculture, U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and other partners are contributing to the site's content.

The site includes Live Webcasts each month. Archived web casts are also available for review and information. Click Here to Access the Manure Management Website.

Earlage an Option for Harvesting Corn

One option for harvesting and storing corn is turning it into earlage, which ultimately will be used for cattle feed. Earlage works well in a variety of cattle diets, including growing and finishing diets for beef cattle.

However, producers should contact their crop insurance agent before harvesting their corn crop as earlage. Failure to do so may be a violation of their insurance policy and could result in significant penalties, Lardy says. Read more from this story...
